

Cable companies do not operate under the same regulatory standards as the LECs. In the long term, it would be best for the community if the cable companies offered access to multiple ISPs through their networks - while charging a modest access fee for network service. However, the real question is what ability the FCC has to influence this outcome?